

MB: We have a couple of goliaths. You have the Lakers, you have the Heat. I would put the Celtics and the Magic in there. You have four teams that are capable of winning a championship, that are, to start the season, better than everybody else. You look to see how these teams take that role, especially with Miami and how they're gonna blend. But then you look at who's gonna be the surprise teams. Who's gonna be the team that all of a sudden nobody wants to play? Can Oklahoma City take the next step and be the second best team in the West? Can Chicago with their tinkering and their great young point guard, with Rose, can they take the next step and be one of the elite teams in the East?

For me, the Knicks and all their different changes that they've made. There are so many storylines. I'm as excited for this season as I've been in a long time. I know I probably say that every year, but I'm such a fan of the game. There are always great storylines to watch.

 Kyle, you are, in my opinion, the most slept-on writer SlamOnline. You continue to drop dope article after dope article while receiving a criminally-low amounts of comments. This interview is another gem! I've always wanted to pick the brain of a play-by-play analyst myself. Keep doing your thing!
